Photoshop is a paid application; it costs $500 for a single user license, and a yearly subscription is available for $2,200. It's built for Windows and works on computers running Windows 7 or higher. Paint.NET Paint.NET (www.getpaint.net) is a free, open-source, cross-platform (Windows, OS X, Linux, and more) application for quick-and-dirty imaging and quick-and-dirty graphics creation. It is a low-res replacement for the tried-and-true Windows Paint program. In addition to creating images, Paint.NET enables you to quickly compose and apply filters and special effects to images. It provides tools for applying borders, automatically saving your work, and includes a basic selection tool as well. Paint.NET works with layers and is a basic color picker, but it's missing some handy functions common to most programs, such as basic layer editing tools and special effects. It's limited, though it's still good for most simple tasks. Figure 6-7 shows you an example of Paint.NET. PhotoScape PhotoScape (www.photoscape.org) is a free cross-platform (Windows, OS X, and Linux) design program for creating and editing raster images. It has an easy drag-and-drop interface and supports the usual crop, rotate, filter, and effects tools used for simple tasks. There are some free additional online learning tutorials available for PhotoScape users as well. PhotoScape is bundled with many other applications, including Adobe Photoshop and GIMP, to use as an image editor. Figure 6-8 shows the steps you need to complete to create a new image. Figure 6-7: Paint.NET offers basic image and graphics creation. Figure 6-8: PhotoScape makes basic image editing easy. When it comes to choosing tools to create images, you have several options available: Photoshop: Use the Photoshop application as a tool for creating and editing images. Paint.NET: Use Paint.NET for the basics, but the app is best if you want to add to that basic capability. PhotoScape: Use it to create and edit raster images. Adobe Photoshop Elements: Use the program to create and edit simple images. (Read more about Elements in Chapter 11.) AutoC

Arafat's portrait was on exhibit in the Wazir Khan Office of the UNHCR (United Nations Refugee Agency) in Lahore. The administration of Pakistan has distanced itself from the exhibition: The UN High Commissioner for Refugees, Antonio Guterres was in Lahore at the time the exhibition was held, and he made a statement which is very clear about the disinterest of Pakistan: The UNHCR also cited the fact that the UNHCR's stance on Israel's treatment of the Palestinians stands in sharp contrast to Pakistan's approach to Uighur people. To this end, the Pakistan government was asked to immediately cease the exhibit. Pakistan's Interior Minister Rehman Malik, who visited the exhibition yesterday, said that although he has invited the UNHCR to visit the country, he did not find the "political" nature of the exhibition objectionable. The internal issues of Pakistan's foreign policy are the responsibility of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, he argued. According to a WOJ News report, Interior Minister Rehman Malik pointed out the "difficulty that the Uighurs have had to face in Pakistan and asked the UN not to take any efforts to raise this issue." The Pakistani minister was more correct in saying that the autonomy of a host country is no justification for participating in or supporting a controversial or even revolting exhibition. However, the issue of Pakistan's support for the Uighurs cannot be separated from the broader domestic political environment. It should be understood that the Uighurs of Pakistan are not only victims of a deplorable human rights situation in the Xinjiang province, as a refugee from that situation, but they are also viewed as a separatist movement. In his statement, UNHCR High Commissioner Antonio Guterres had nothing but praise for the cooperation between the Uighur and Pakistan government. Nevertheless, just a week before, the government had dissolved the Uighur Council of Ministers, with president of the council, Muhammed Yusuf Alimoro and three other senior Uighur officials being arrested in the same week. The Xinjiang Communist Party secretary in charge of the province's official Uighur newspaper, the Uighur Daily, was also detained along with three other people, one of whom was the paper's editor-in-chief. The arrest of seven Uighur parliamentarians and officials, including three cabinet ministers, has also been widely reported in the Pakistani press. The political environment of Pakistan in recent years has led to the marginalization of the Uighurs
