To remove the bug in the plugin it is necessary to follow the steps in the instructions above. I'm not a programmer but I appreciate your passion in your work. This problem in particular drives me crazy. One thing I could do is to create a page on my site with the form and without the resizing component and try to break the submission, but I need to be sure it's completely safe. Thank you for taking the time to take a look at my post and for taking the time to try to fix the problem for us. I'm not sure I fully understand what you're asking. Do you mean that you created a page with your form on it and you are submitting that form to a different page on your site? If you are then you could add some sort of validation to ensure that the form is actually being submitted to the correct page. If you aren't sure then it would be worth contacting us via support@resizingkit.com and we would be more than happy to assist you. There is a way to make sure the forms on your website are only submitted to the correct page, the process is called "Non-persistent Referrer". Let me explain in more detail. What happens when a visitor loads a website is that they are given a referral URL (also known as a "Referer") that is actually a part of that visitor's browser's memory. The URL that is stored in the browser's memory is what allows the visitor's request to be identified when the browser sends the request through a proxy to the web server. This URL is usually hidden so it can only be displayed to the visitor and is normally not displayed to the web server. In the case of resizingkit.com this URL is part of the web server's URL but it will not be stored in the browser's memory when a visitor loads your website. This is why when someone submits a form and the resizingkit.com is called the URL is never set to anything. Using non-persistent referrers is a way to ensure that the correct pages are being visited. I am using non-persistent referrers and I have not had a problem with it working in my current setup. I would just like to see a video of this. Can you please provide us with a 82157476af
